History
Unsung Hero
Those directly involved in the scandal said that the last few days had been the most trying period of an already stressful story. It began with testimony from US Customs and Border Protection Deputy Commissioner Robert Perez, who testified that he had told Sandusky to pursue the matter on the kid's behalf. Perez's testimony ended with the arrest of Penn State head coach Joe Paterno. Then, a former Penn State graduate assistant came forward to confirm what Sandusky has said: he had witnessed Penn State President Graham Spanier pressuring Paterno to go easy on Sandusky when he reported the incident to the authorities in 1998. ABC News
The scandal centers around Penn State head coach Joe Paterno's handling of the sexual-abuse allegations against Jerry Sandusky. "Nobody is going to say, 'Just cover it up and cover it up,'" the former graduate assistant told ABC News. "I believe he didn't want it to go to the grand jury. He didn't want it to become a scandal, to go to the media." Perez, who was the head of the customs agency at the time of the alleged incident, testified that he told Sandusky to pursue the matter. He said he was told by Spanier to get Paterno involved, but not to go to the grand jury. "I told Jerry to pursue the matter," Perez said on the stand Tuesday. "I told Jerry to keep it confidential." Paterno, in his retirement announcement on Nov. 24, said that he had "fully informed the head of our sports administration and the university administration about the situation." At the time, the school found that Spanier never heard of the alleged incident until he spoke to Paterno in the spring of 2002 about the child being used as a sexual object. Spanier promised to take immediate action. Spanier's house was broken into on Sept. 11, 2009. He was out of town, so two of his three cars were missing. The door of his home had been pried open, and his gold 1970s-era Plymouth Fury sat in the driveway. The Plymouth had its doors open and contained nothing unusual. Spanier himself called 911 from his home at about 5:30 p.m.
