x264mkv. We are a group of individuals who enjoy the challenge of working with our hands as much as we enjoy making a beautiful, functional piece of art. We are the Makers. Heck, we don't even make much stuff. But we like it that way. We call ourselves "Digital Artisans" because we are at ease with using techy tools. When a "normal" person uses the word artisan, they usually conjure up images of men in white aprons working in a white room, usually in a big city. We want to re-imagine artisanal work in a modern setting. Our "Artisan" name also alludes to the common practice of labeling computer programmers as craftsmen, a misguided notion. When we began, we created a name and designed a logo based on the idea that we were, like the TV series Portlandia, seeking an identity that would take us to another place, that was neither fish nor fowl, that was more than I am and more than I am not. We knew it would be hard to pull off a fusion of two of the most distant ideas we could think of: Music and Electronics. But we liked the way the logo worked. We also loved how it read, A Digital Arts Craftsman. We've grown to love the logo. It helps us when we're feeling stuck. We've used it as a badge of honor when we submit work to a gallery or a contest. We think it's a nice badge of honor. So, what kind of music do we make? We're not sure. Our stuff is Electronic and Rock. We don't see ourselves as a DJ or a band. We like to think that our self titled music project was a first pass at what a rock band, for lack of a better word, should be. We're tinkering with the idea of having a drummer who is "anonymous" and "unrecognizable". Not that we don't love our drummer, just that we don't know how to write songs for a live band, or even a studio band. And our songs are anything but anthemic.
